

Annapurna I Expedition - 40 Days

Annapurna I Expedition is climbing to one of the 8000m peaks of the planet. Being 8,091 m / 26,545 ft above the sea surface Mt. Annapurna offers perhaps the best sceneries of the mountain peaks, valleys, glaciers, etc. Standing on the top of it, several adventures gain what they were longing for for a long time.

Although it is the first mountain above 8000m that be scaled ever in Nepal, it is a technical mountain to climb. Climbers having previous experience in peak climbing with good physical condition are highly recommended for those seeking to achieve the summit of Annapurna.

The proportion of successors to scale this mountain is increasing each year. Considering the data, last year, more than 100 people submitted this mountain and the number will hopefully increase this year too.

Outward Adventure Treks and Expedition operates the Annapurna expedition in both the autumn and spring seasons. We usually run the climb through the regular route, which is the southwest ridge. The journey to Annapurna I begins with a drive/flight to Pokhara from Kathmandu. Continuing the drive from Pokhara to Tatopani, we begin our trek. Passing Lete, Miristi Khola and a couple of other villages, we reach Annapurna Base camp where our actual climb begins. On an 8000m, expedition climbers spend most of their time at base camp, so naturally, base camp becomes a home away from home on any long expedition. We establish our camp within walking distance between meeting points of different groups and the Annapurna massif's strategic viewing positions. Satori provides a personal tent that becomes your private retreat, a dining tent, a common area, a shower tent, and a toilet tent. When you arrive at the base camp, it will already be fully established, with hot beverages and snacks available immediately. Waiting for you upon your arrival will be your base camp staff and high-altitude climbing Sherpa. Before your climbing period, you will have a Puja ceremony at the base camp for good luck.

Now, the climbing practices at Camp I, II, and III and Camp IV begin. Climbing successfully Annapurna I, we trek back to Tatopani, we drive back to Pokhara and further to Kathmandu before your final departure to another destination.
